Lauren has a litigation practice focusing on constitutional and administrative law with a special interest in Charter issues. Lauren specializes in judicial reviews and administrative law representing public institutions. She has represented clients at all levels of court in British Columbia as well as the Federal Court of Appeal. She was a key member of a complex Charter litigation trial lasting 117 days in the BC Supreme Court.

After graduating from Osgoode Hall Law School, Lauren clerked for the Honourable Justice Ann Marie McDonald at the Federal Court of Canada. As a law clerk at the Federal Court, Lauren had the opportunity to work on many judicial reviews as well as a wide variety of cases including Class Actions, Intellectual Property, Indigenous Law, and Immigration Law.

Outside of work, Lauren is a board member LDS Society, formerly known as the Learning Disabilities Society, a non-profit organization that provides access to academic support for children and adults with learning differences. Lauren is also a coach for the UBC Laskin Moot team.
