Sasha is a dedicated resource for employers, navigating day-to-day workplace questions as they arise. When Sasha is handling litigation matters, our clients can expect a practical approach and straightforward communication, with consideration and review of avenues for resolution.

Prior to joining Harris, Sasha worked as a litigation associate at a regional law firm in Edmonton, Alberta, and handled a range of litigation matters, including employment, personal injury, collections and contractual disputes. Sasha has assisted clients in a variety of civil litigation proceedings at the Court of Justice and the Court of King's Bench in Alberta.

Sasha has handled a variety of employment law matters and human rights matters, acting for both employers and employees. She is also passionate about privacy law, and enjoys assisting clients with privacy-related questions.

Sasha received her Juris Doctor with Honours from the University of Alberta in 2016. During law school, Sasha worked at an immigration law firm and at the Workers' Compensation Board of Alberta.
