Ingrid's practice focuses on privacy, data protection, and regulatory compliance. She routinely handles access to information matters, representing clients before privacy regulators, advising government institutions and businesses on their disclosure obligations, and assisting third parties affected by access requests. Ingrid also advises on compliance and data governance matters, including developing record retention programs, drafting policies, responding to complaints, and counselling clients on various initiatives involving personal information.

Prior to joining Harris, Ingrid practiced at a national law firm in Vancouver. She builds on her background in complex commercial and privacy disputes to provide business-focused regulatory advice, helping clients identify potential issues early and develop practical strategies to mitigate risk.

Ingrid serves clients across a wide range of sectors including health care, education, financial services, retail, manufacturing, hospitality, waste management, energy, construction and real estate development, professional licensing, and transportation.
